THE BAUDER LECTURE

thinking big
to build the future

Highly skilled workers are the foundation of our future, and education is the key to a highly skilled workforce. That's why we support educational programs and organizations, especially those that promote math and science. Our support starts early as we stimulate young children's curiosity about these topics, and continues with support of advanced programs and scholarships at high schools, colleges and technical schools. After all, every successful student helps empower the community.

Reception and Booksigning

After the reading, please join us for a dessert, wine, and coffee reception in the fireplace area of Alumnae Hall. Books and T-shirts are for sale near the fireplace in Alumnae Hall. The booksigning will begin immediately after the reading and will take place near the speaker's lectern. We ask that you form a single line and bring only one book to be signed. However, please feel free to join the reception before joining the bookline. We'll circulate to let you know when the line has eased up a bit. Thank you.

Our motives for supporting education are as simple as ABC.

Comerica is deeply committed to the communities we serve. For that reason, the Comerica Charitable Foundation makes hundreds of monetary grants each year, many to worthy educational causes and organizations. Potential is one of the best investments that can be made. Success – for an individual, a company or a community – means little if it's not shared with others. Comerica is proud to support the success of the communities we serve.

Held in conjunction with the lecture series, The Amy S. McCombs/Frederick P. Currier Writing Award recognizes Marygrove students whose essays, short stories, or poetry best express the spirit of the visiting author's work. Just prior to tonight's reading, the 2004 winners were recognized at a dinner for Pearl Cleage hosted by President Glenda D. Price. We regret that we went to press before the 2004 award winners were named. Their names will appear in next year's program.
